

ABSTRACT

A method of identifying problems in applications is provided. The method in one embodiment comprises monitoring at a kernel level system resource usage of one or more running applications without modifying run-time environments of the running applications and identifying from the monitored system usage, an application whose system usage pattern meets a predetermined criteria associated with one or more problems.

10